SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

Confidential British Foreign Office Political Correspondence

The General Correspondence files were and still are the main repository for the documents collected by the British Foreign Office. The files contain the vast majority of the documentation received and created by the Foreign Office, which was established in January of 1782. These are the working papers of the Foreign Office used in the development of British foreign policy. The information contained in these documents was often classified and was not made available for study outside of the British government until many years after the documents were created.

The Foreign Office significantly revised the filing system of the General Correspondence in 1906. Since then, the Foreign Office has arranged the papers into eleven classes of General Correspondence: Africa, New Series; Commercial; Communications; Consular; Contraband; Dominions Information; Library; News; Political; Prisoners of War and Aliens; and Treaty. Each of these classes contains the papers of the department after which it is named, except for Political, which consists of several political departments.

This microfilm publication contains copies of only the Political class of General Correspondence. The Foreign Office is internally divided into departments. The political departments are those in which the diplomatic business of the Foreign Office is conducted. Diplomatic business should be construed in very broad terms. It includes not only the formal relations between two countries but also the information needed by the British government in order to conduct diplomatic relations. This includes the domestic political, economic, social, and cultural relations of another country plus that country's relations with other nations, as well as British internal political concerns.

British Foreign Office during WWI

The wartime role of the Foreign Office was inevitably one of upheaval, at turns expanded and circumscribed. The Foreign Office withdrew its diplomatic missions from the enemy capitals. Other branches of the government, especially during the premiership of Lloyd George after 1916, threatened its traditional preeminence in the conduct of foreign affairs.¹ These developments left their mark on the political correspondence, as did the organizational changes prompted by the conflict. Sir Edward (after July 1916 Viscount) Grey remained foreign secretary from the outbreak of war until the advent of the Lloyd George government. Grey was replaced by Arthur Balfour on December 10, 1916. For most of the war, Lord Robert Cecil served as parliamentary undersecretary.

In August 1914 the existing Western (Europe) and Eastern (Europe) Departments of the Foreign Office were merged into a single War Department to deal with military and political questions arising from the conflict, as well as to handle more routine European business. The prewar American and Far Eastern Departments remained separate. Among the other wartime creations were the Political Intelligence Department (P.I.D.), set up in 1918 to report on countries where diplomatic representation had ceased, and the Contraband Department, which in February 1916 developed into the Ministry of Blockade. Until July 1918, Cecil combined the position of minister of blockade with his Foreign Office post. The principal subdivisions of his ministry were the Finance Section, the Foreign Trade Department, the Restriction of Enemy Supplies Department, the War Trade Intelligence Department, and the War Trade Statistical Department.

The political correspondence was remolded along similar lines. Under the pressure of wartime business, the overseas missions no longer had the leisure to prepare the Annual Reports on their countries of residence that had regularly been included since 1906. A second main element of the prewar years comprised correspondence with the geographical areas covered by the respective departments of the Foreign Office. After 1914, correspondence on Far Eastern and American affairs continued but in reduced quantity. The 1914–1920 political correspondence is, however, an important source of evidence about East Asian developments such as Japan's participation in the war and Japan's relations with China.

World War I Correspondence

The documents composing the Confidential British Foreign Office Political Correspondence World War I cover the period from the declaration and outbreak of war between the European powers in July 1914, to the armistice between Germany and the Allies in November 1918, and beyond, into 1920, to the postwar period of armistice enforcement, Allied forces occupation, frontier rectification, and war reparations. The documents in this microfilm collection include dispatches, reports, and telegrams. These documents fill the gap in coverage created by two established reference works: British Documents on the Origins of the War, 1898–1914, by G. P. Gooch and H. V. Temperley and Documents on Foreign Policy, 1919–1939, by E. L. Woodward and others.

The earliest records in this collection about World War I address the assassination of Archduke Francis Ferdinand of Austro-Hungary in July 1914, public opinion, and the rapid escalation into war with the alignment of the Entente Powers (initially France, Great Britain, and Russia), the Central Powers (initially Austria-Hungary, Germany, and associated states in Central Europe), and the neutral states. The reports of military attaches and of diplomatic and consular personnel describe the political situation in countries touched by the European crisis as well as early military and naval movements.

In addition to political overviews, the collection contains descriptions of the financial positions of warring countries. Researchers will find information, for example, about the German economy, the fate of monies of British subjects in Germany, and the coin famine in France.

Against the acceleration of war, the documents detail antiwar sentiments in the form of demonstrations, conferences, and peace movements. Still in 1914, there were reports of the “Effect of Japanese declaration of war against Germany on the native population in the East (Dutch and British possessions).”

The colonialism of European nations figures significantly through and beyond the war years. Details of the war's expansion to involve the Ottoman Empire (1914), Bulgaria and Italy (1915), and other nations are provided through a broad range of correspondence. Covered nations include latecomers such as Greece and the United States, which entered the war even as the Russian Empire attempted to withdraw, doing so finally early in 1918 and leaving newly independent Estonia, Finland, Latvia, Lithuania, and Poland to take on roles in the war and in the political correspondence.

The documents examine many technological innovations of World War I in detail, particularly the nascent air and naval warfare. The correspondence describes, for example, military airplanes and zeppelins and their effectiveness in shaping the war. Similarly, in naval warfare, accounts of blockades, torpedoes, and U-boat submarine warfare illustrate attacks to sabotage naval vessels as well as merchant and passenger ships in attempts to interrupt trade and shape public opinion. Military mines and protection of harbors and navigation channels figure prominently in these accounts. Other correspondence covers the trench warfare of the Western Front, together with associated artillery and inventions such as “grenade throwing instruments” and chemical warfare, with manufacturers of chlorine gas and phosgene examined.

The political correspondence provides extensive reports on attacks, battles, bombings, logistics, mobilization, strategy, and troop movements. The movements of expeditionary and other forces, through Europe and its colonies (including portions of northern, central, and southern Africa, India, Ceylon, and beyond) are chronicled together with attendant battles. In addition to physical blockades to navigation were a variety of sanctions and “international [financial] blockades.” The correspondence also chronicles truces and holiday armistices in the midst of battle.

The documents cover a range of propaganda efforts to control intelligence and to shape domestic and foreign opinion throughout the war. Among the correspondence are numerous examples of espionage and counterespionage and of individuals accused of sedition. These cases sometimes touch on matters closer to home for the Foreign Office, as with “The Irish Question of Home Rule.” Similarly the correspondence covers a wide range of wartime but not necessarily military issues, including wartime birth rates, the role of women in war, food supply, Zionism, the Vatican, and international courts.

The correspondence includes a significant escalation of reports on extensive efforts at negotiating peace, well before the war drew to a close with the November 11, 1918, armistice with Germany. The correspondence covers conferences of allies and warring nations, as well as behind-the-scenes and secretive efforts such as the Sixtus Affair of 1916 and 1917 (though reported in 1920.) Indeed, these efforts are a constant thread, tracing back to the very start of the war, to antiwar movements and to early calls for a League of Nations, but reports of negotiations reach a peak between the armistice and the Treaty of Versailles on June 28, 1919.

Following the treaty, the political correspondence begins to address new issues: peace conditions; Allied military occupation; frontier rectification and the redrawing of the map of Europe, with the Central Powers each losing territory; the loss of Germany's colonial possessions; the disposal of enemy property to neutrals; punishment of enemy officers for war crimes; controls on enemy rearmament; the reorganization of railroads; plebiscites in Silesia; war reparations and special assistance to devastated areas; the protection of war orphans; erection of monuments and memorials and the protection of military graves; and the establishment and strengthening of international organizations devoted to maintaining peace or to war crimes inquiries.

HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

Both the Reel Index and the Subject Index to this collection point users to the Foreign Office File Number at which information on a particular subject can be found. This number is located in the upper right-hand corner of each document.

In the image below of the first document on Reel 1 of this collection, please note that File No. 30342 appears in the upper right-hand corner. The subject of that document, Assassination of Archduke Francis Ferdinand, appears immediately below the File Number. In the Reel Index, the File Number will appear to the far left, and the subject will follow. In the Subject Index, under Francis Ferdinand, the first locator that users will find is 1: 30342, indicating that they can find information about Francis Ferdinand on Reel 1 at F.O. File Number 30342.
