By Vladimir Danilenko,
Director of the State Archive of the Kiev Oblast

From the State Archive of the Kiev Oblast (GAKO) comes a collection of documents, Fond No. R-3066 Aktsionernoe obshchestvo Russko-kanadsko-amerikanskoe passazhirscoe agentstvo (RUSCAPA) [Joint-Stock Company Russo-Canadian-American Passenger Agency]. The Fond contains 1,470 dossiers dating from 1926 to 1930 that stayed in secret stacks and remained inaccessible to scholars until December 1991, when it was declassified and made generally accessible.

In the 1920s, Jewish habitants of the USSR were emigrating from the Soviet Union in large numbers due to Bolshevik persecution, and for other political and economic reasons. Many of those departing for purely political reasons were either members of the religious elite of Jewish society headed for Poland and the Baltics, or those who supported the White movement, Socialists, or other such parties who emigrated primarily to Western Europe. A smaller group comprised of Zionists left for Palestine. Those émigrés with no money in the bank generally had relations in the USA and other countries who could pay their fare and support them in their new places of residence for a time. Members of precisely this group comprised the majority of those moving to the USA, Canada and South Africa. Other émigrés, who were often well provided for, but who had no relations in the English-speaking world, were heading for Latin America and Western Europe, where it was easier to enter.

The restrictions on entering the United States by émigrés from Eastern Europe, imposed in 1921 and 1924 under the Johnson Acts, reduced the number of Jewish people entering the country. For example, under the 1924 act, no more than 2,148 people from Russia, no more than 5,982 people from Poland and no more than 749 people from Romania per year were entitled to get permits to settle in the USA. However, it was possible for more persons to enter the USA than was allowed for by this quota if the applicant's relatives provided guarantees of full material support. Still, the Johnson Acts forced many émigrés to change their intended destination, many of whom ended up in Western Europe, Palestine, Africa and Latin America. The Jewish communities in Caribbean countries, especially those in Cuba, Brazil, Mexico, Venezuela and Colombia, came into existence largely through this wave of emigration in the late 1920s.

As it was impossible to leave Europe without certain documents and permits, organizations specializing in such matters opened their doors. RUSCAPA was one such organization that facilitated the travel and paperwork involved for Soviet émigrés.

As documented by the papers in this collection, RUSCAPA was set up in the early 1920s as a joint-stock company whose members were the following passenger carriers: Dobrovol'nyi Flot and Gosudarstvennyi Torgovyi Flot (Russia); the Canadian Pacific Airway Company, Cunard Steamship Company Ltd., Holland-America Line, Royal Mail Steam Patek Company, Canadian Pacific Steamships, Anchor Line (Henderson Bros), Anchir Donaldson Line, Pacific Steam Navigation Company and Union-Castle Line. RUSCAPA's central office settled in Moscow with a branch office in Kiev and agencies and representatives operating throughout populated areas in Ukraine.

RUSCAPA helped USSR citizens process emigration documents and arranged for their transit to the USA, Canada, countries in southern Africa and to the Caribbean region. Accordingly, the primary documents in this collection contain information about several thousand émigrés from the USSR, most of whom were Jewish. These files include questionnaires, medical certificates, company correspondence with its customers, letters, telegrams and other documents. Many of these papers pertain to the rules and procedures for exiting the USSR and entering the USA and Canada, the requirements to be met by the émigrés and personal data including family members, age, family status, state of health, literacy, costs involved in leaving the country, etc.

As an example regarding travel fees of the time, we learn from Delo No. 34 that, according to the USSR Central Executive Committee resolution of 7 April 1926, an internal passport for working people and their dependents cost, all duties included, 225 rubles, whereas it would cost nonworkers 340 rubles. This cost was only one of many, for one could only leave the USSR from Moscow, thus requiring a fare to Moscow and the necessary sum to stay in the city for a few days in addition to further travel fares and fees. As a rule, people left the country on invitations from their relations in other countries who, in the majority of cases, had to pay for the traveler's passage.

Before one could secure permission to leave the region, a questionnaire was given that included queries on how many people would be traveling on a ticket, their names, day, month and year of birth, what languages were read and spoken amongst the traveling party, their marital status, place of birth, the gubernia city where their passports would be issued from, their destination (city, country and detailed address of the person inviting the émigrés), their permanent address and ticket information.

The physical state of those wishing to leave the country had to meet rigid standards. The joint-stock company's certificate of health included answers to the questions of whether the person had infectious diseases, epilepsy, mental disorders, tuberculosis of the lungs or other organs, heart disease, venereal diseases, diseases affecting the skin, eye disease, whether he or she has any deformities or crippled parts of the body, hernias, or was currently pregnant. Instructions to attending physicians included:

Since the passengers are subject to careful medical examination before embarkation and imprecise description of their ailments may result in barring them from getting on board and in the costs this entails, RUSCAPA asks you to please accurately describe the discovered ailments on the reverse side of this and indicate the name of the patient.

Whenever any physical defects are found in passengers, including hernia, you should also indicate: (a) their etiology (b) the extent of this or that physical defect, (c) the extent of resulting disability. In the event of eye diseases, especially of trachoma and its traces, you are to give as detailed description as possible of what you can see at the moment on the mucous membrane of the eye. (d.1072, p. 8).

Here is an excerpt from a letter (4 October 1926) issued by the Kiev office concerning Braiana Sterlin and her family that shows how seriously the state of émigrés' health was regarded.

We are in receipt of your letter of 28 September with the forms of certificate of health.

In view of the fact that Braiana Sterlin has a catarrh of the apex pulmonis, we ask you that the passenger provide the results of bacteriological examination of her sputum and that you send them to us.

Since Braina and Leib Sterlin both have conjunctivitis, they are now supposed to start receiving treatment for the disease so as to have it completely cured by the time of their departure for the United States. Please send us an additional certificate of health once they have been cured.

In addition to the results of bacteriological examination of Braina's sputum, kindly send us registration card No. 211, following which we will send the passengers new registration cards required for getting international passports unless there are health hindrances to their departure for the United States. (d. 1174, p. 61)

The following could also be a reason for denying entry into the USA:

As regards Rakhmil' Serlin, despite the fact that the American consul has received permission for issuing him a visa to enter the United States, as a passenger in the most-favored category, he cannot travel to that country because a permission for him was received on 2 June 1926, when the passenger was above 21 years of age. According to the immigration law of the United States currently in effect, children leaving for the United States to join their parents can be issued American visas only if permission for their entry into the United States has been received before they turned 21.

We also ask you to send us a copy of the birth certificate of Leiba Sterlin, pending the receipt of which we cannot send a registration card for the above passenger.

In the event he does not have a birth certificate, ask the passenger to kindly provide you with that part of his residence permit, which indicates the time of his birth. (Ibid)

All documents in this collection are an invaluable and untapped source of information for studies of history of emigration from the USSR to other countries around the world. They also contain extensive factual material that may be helpful for researchers in finding out about the faith of these émigrés.

The date the company ceased business is not known.

Documents are in Russian.
