SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Journals of Operations of the American Expeditionary Forces during World War I were submitted to the Operations Branch (G-3) by U.S. army divisions and corps in Europe during World War I. This series of records also includes several journals of operations submitted by French Army units. The UPA collection The American Expeditionary Forces during World War I, Journals of Operations contains operations reports, statistical strength reports, and summaries of intelligence detailing troop movements and operations of both Allied and enemy forces. The records date from March 1918 through August 1919.

Daily operations reports were made concerning enemy and allied activities, including artillery use with machine guns, bombs, grenades, and gasses, aerial flights, gas bombs, observation balloons, photography, prisoners, casualties, weather conditions that had an effect on troop and air progress, and troop morale.

Detailed injuries and casualties were also included, although rarely were individual names given. A memorandum from Chief of Staff Campbell King with the subject “Unnecessary losses” stated: “For the same number of troops engaged on our Corps front, American losses are from two to four times as great as those of the French. There is but one conclusion: it is that our men, either from ignorance or carelessness, are not taking cover” (Reel 7, Frame 0111). Reports were made from the British and French to a liaison.

Also included in this collection are reports by telegram and telephone, statements from prisoners regarding enemy troop movements, unit locations, numbers of enemy wounded, killed, and gassed, and other details.

Many prisoners were reported captured by the American and Allied forces, such as the French surprise attack with 10,000 prisoners counted (Reel 1, Frame 0407). A report from the American Third Division stated: “A boat with two boche tried to get across the river last night. Both men were shot. It is not known whether they were deserters or the advance party of a patrol. Our inexperienced outguards do not yet understand the importance of prisoners” (Reel 8, Frame 0587).

The interrogation of prisoners yielded much intelligence. Information such as number of troops, locations, enemy raids, and patrols was gathered. Following are some intelligence and interrogation reports from prisoners:

- One prisoner stated that “the German troops read with interest the propaganda tracts which we shot into their trenches but considered them ‘bunk’” (Reel 12, Frame 0629).
- Another prisoner “has little confidence in the use of propaganda by either side and said that in his opinion soldiers paid little attention to it. He added that his men were glad to get it because a prize had been offered for the first copies” (Reel 5, Frame 0301).
- A report stated “The Crown Prince at a cost of a million men at Verdun gained only a few square kilometers of worthless territory, and lost nearly all of it to the French again in a couple of days—the ridiculous Kaiser even had moving-picture machines brought up to photograph his triumphant entry into Verdun” (Reel 12, Frame 0603).
- A prisoner reported that an American deserted into the German lines, and as a result, the Germans expected an American attack. “The enemy is so anxious to obtain a prisoner that an offer of 500 marks and 14 days leave have been offered...for the capture of one. This prisoner who was out on a patrol when captured, expected to get an American and by doing so win, in addition to the above reward, the iron cross, 1st class, and a commission” (Reel 1, Frame 0694).

The collection includes translations of letters taken from prisoners. The following is an extract from a German prisoner: “I am going to send you a beautiful ring that I found in France during the offensive. Don’t pay any attention to that actor for I will send you lots of money and also the ring. I certainly hope that I will never fight in the trenches again; even here I am in constant danger of my life. Even yet you may have some other man for your lover.... In this vicinity the Americans have been firing on us with one cannon after another, so that one can’t go out at all, —what with shell explosions on all sides and men going down about you” (Reel 4, Frame 0566).

A translation from the VII French Army summary reports: “German spies—one of our soldiers, who escaped from the German lines, states that during his captivity, he has seen men in khaki clothes of different kinds, without coats, American helmets, and carrying French and English gas masks. They have talked to German officers without saluting and departed in the direction of our lines.... The men in khaki carried two masks, whereas during the last ten days the American troops carried only the English mask. On account of these errors, by these spies, we can frequently apprehend them” (Reel 5, Frame 0286).

Both Allied and enemy troops used gasses in combat. A report of casualties stated that some troops were gassed by eating gassed food, while the French reported the most severe gas bombardment ever with six types of gasses used and two unknown (Reel 9, Frame 0430).

Troop movements were made by railroad, trucks, motorcycles, and on foot with some use of horses. In an interesting daily report, a preference was made for Harley Davidson motorcycles: “the Indian motorcycles are fairly falling to pieces under this service. The Harley-Davidson machines on the other hand are going strong and giving little trouble. We long ago discovered this in the Signal Corps but have not been able to get the M.T.S. to see it. No fighting organization should have anything but Harley-Davidson motorcycles” (Reel 8, Frame 0480).

Researchers will find interesting the codes that the Americans used for combat divisions (Reel 14, Frames 0037, 0546), coded and decoded telegram copies of casualties and other information (Reel 1, Frames 0742–0744), and the armistice with Germany (Reel 13, Frame 0447).

Other related collections that might be of interest to researchers include British Documents on Foreign Affairs: Reports and Papers from the Foreign Office Confidential Print, Series H: The First World War, 1914–1918 and Series I: The Paris Peace Conference of 1919; Combat Estimates: Europe, 1920–1943; Confidential British Foreign Office Political Correspondence: World War I; The Mexican Punitive Expedition, 1916–1917, General Correspondence, and The World War I Survey.

The World War I Survey

The Journals of Operations of the American Expeditionary Forces during World War I were submitted to the Operations Branch (G-3) by U.S. army divisions and corps in Europe during World War I. This series of records also includes several journals of operations submitted by French Army units. The UPA collection The American Expeditionary Forces during World War I, Journals of Operations contains operations reports, statistical strength reports, and summaries of intelligence detailing troop movements and operations of both Allied and enemy forces, including artillery and aerial activities, gas bombs, observation balloons, prisoners, casualties, and weather conditions that had an effect on troop and air progress. The records date from March 1918 through August 1919.

Daily operations reports were made concerning enemy and Allied activities, including air flights, observation balloons, artillery use with machine guns, bombs, grenades, and gasses, and troop morale. A weather report and detailed injuries and casualties were also included, although rarely were individual names given. A memorandum from Chief of Staff Campbell King with the subject "Unnecessary losses" stated: "For the same number of troops engaged on our Corps front, American losses are from two to four times as great as those of the French. There is but one conclusion: it is that our men, either from ignorance or carelessness, are not taking cover" (Reel 7, Frame 0111). Reports were made from the British and French to a liaison.

Also included in this collection are reports by telegram and telephone, statements from prisoners regarding enemy troop movements, unit locations, and other details, and numbers of troops wounded, killed, and gassed.

Many prisoners were reported captured by the Allied forces, such as the French surprise attack with 10,000 prisoners counted (Reel 1, Frame 0407). A report from the Third Division stated: "A boat with two boche tried to get across the river last night. Both men were shot. It is not known whether they were deserters or the advance party of a patrol. Our inexperienced outguards do not yet understand the importance of prisoners" (Reel 8, Frame 0587).

Much intelligence was gathered by the interrogation of prisoners. Information such as number of troops, locations, enemy raids, and patrols was gathered. Following are some intelligence and interrogation reports from prisoners: One prisoner stated that "the German troops read with interest the propaganda tracts which we shot into their trenches but considered them 'bunk'" (Reel 12, Frame 0629). Another prisoner reported that an American deserted into the German lines, and as a result, the Germans expected an American attack. "The enemy is so anxious to obtain a prisoner that an offer of 500 marks and 14 days leave have been offered...for the capture of one. This prisoner who was out on a patrol when captured, expected to get an American and by doing so win, in addition to the above reward, the iron cross, 1st class, and a commission" (Reel 1, Frame 0694).

Researchers will find interesting the codes that the Americans used for combat divisions (Reel 14, Frames 0037, 0546) and coded and decoded telegram copies of casualties and other information (Reel 1, Frames 0742–0744), as well as the armistice with Germany (Reel 13, Frame 0447).
